Author Elisa Morgan remembers the day she heard a loud crash somewhere in the house and discovered her three-shelf hutch had fallen from the wall and shattered her late grandmother's antique china collection into pieces on the floor. The worst part was realizing that she could do nothing to fix it. As she swept up the broken shards, other moments came to mind when something precious to her shattered beyond repair. The first time was when she was five years old, and her parents announced their divorce. The post Restoring the Broken Pieces of Our Lives appeared first on Jim Daly.
