When you ask couples which areas of life influence their marriage the most, children and finances are usually number one and two on the list. You may be surprised to learn that chores rank third. How can something as simple as housework fuel conflict in a marriage? Not long after the wedding, couples become focused on household tasks that matter to one spouse but not the other. The next thing you know they're locked in a power struggle over who does more and who works harder. The post Avoiding the Chore War appeared first on Jim Daly.
