Library Welcomes Science and Social Studies Teachers for New School YearThe Library of Congress began the 2023-2024 school year by welcoming two teachers to its Capitol Hill campus. Kelsey Beeghly, a science curriculum and assessment coordinator from Orlando, Florida, will serve as the Library's 2023-2024 Albert Einstein Distinguished Educator Fellow. Tyron Bey, a middle school social studies teacher from Prince George's County, Maryland, has been named the 2023-2024 Teacher-in-Residence at the Library of Congress. Beeghly and Bey will work closely with staff members in the Library's Center for Learning, Literacy and Engagement to help make primary sources from the Library's collections more accessible for teachers, students and families throughout the United States. They will assist in developing materials and experiences for other educators, and collaborate in the creation of a space in the Thomas Jefferson Building's future Learning Center for families and student groups.
